

GOT WIRES?

Here's one solution to the potential hazard of overhead wires in scrap yards. Our friends at Keywell have attached power line warning markers to the lines in their yards where a crane might come into contact with the wire. These markers are identical to the ones you've seen around airports and hospitals to warn aircraft of overhead power line hazards. It's an innovative way to reduce this common hazard.

If you've devised a unique way to reduce or eliminate hazards in your operation, I'd like to hear about it. Send your ideas to: joebateman@isri.org.
